REMEDIAL READING, STUDY SKILLS
IMPROVEMENT CLASSES OFFERED BY UNIVERSITY JULY 19-AUG. 17

MISSOULA--

The annual "Remedial Reading and Study Skills Improvement Classes" will be offered to elementary, high school and college students during the second half of the summer session at the University of Montana, Missoula, from July 19-Aug. 17.

Help in remedial reading will be offered students in grades 1-12 who are not reading up to their ability level. Those receiving help will be assigned to groups of approximately two to four pupils, according to age, grade and level of reading.

"Individual attention will be given to those who need it," said Dr. James Munro, professor of education at UM and director of the program. The groups will meet one hour each morning Monday through Friday during the second half-session.

Special reading and study skills classes will be held for those in grades 8-12 plus college level who are not remedial cases but who need help in reading speed, comprehension and vocabulary development, and who need assistance in learning how to study textbooks, take notes in class and prepare for examinations.

"In the past, these classes have been particularly beneficial to high school students who wish to prepare for college," Dr. Munro said. "The fee will not be over $10 because the (sponsoring) organization is nonprofit."

For further information interested individuals may write Dr. James Munro, School of Education, University of Montana, Missoula, Mont. 59801, or they may telephone him at 243-2262 (home--549-3377), or the School of Education office, 243-4911.

A follow-up announcement will be made later.
